Oh, Those Saucy Saucers!

Although the Air Corps, after a long period of research, has abandoned its inquiry into all of the stories about flying saucers and interplanetary space ships, scarcely a day passes that these mysterious objects aren't "seen" somewhere.

A Journal editor recently visited the armed services office of public information at the Pentagon in Washington and found that "flying saucer" mail comes in daily.

Typical letters:

One from a Canadian girl saying she has all possible information on the disc-like objects and will reveal the secrets "at a price."

Another from a Pennsylvanian who saw one but doesn't dare tell his fellow workers because of the kidding he'll get, "although I can prove I haven't had a drink of the hard stuff in years."

Here in our own county, in the shadow of Mt. Palomar Observatory, "Prof." George Adamski, an amateur astronomer, saw a space ship from another planet, he says, and he's figured out that the visitors are friendly but intensely curious about atomic explosions.

Just for the record, mass hallucination about strange spectacles in the sky is nothing new. Back in 1881 many residents of Delaware and Virginia reported they had seen luminous angels, garbed in white, marching in long processions against the night-time sky.
